

Conversation Parade

Try kicking off Family Hour with a question just to get people talking.

Randomize (if you like) by picking a number between 61 and 300 (each card is numbered).

Every person gets a chance to reply, including reader.

Take your time on each question.
One good answer can go from 10 seconds to 10 minutes.

The preceding pages are from the book Family Hour, released in January 2023. I hope you enjoy them enough to want a printed version. If so, please consider buying a copy.

About Family Hour

Create a habit that gets you connecting as a family. It can happen nightly, every few days, or weekly. It doesn't matter if the kids are 6 or 17, you can still make it fun for everyone.

There's a simple way to get everyone involved: rotate the decision maker for the night's entertainment based on their first initial. The family of four who wrote this book call it MELT (Mike, Esmé, Larry and Toby), but you'll use your own family's initials.

This book also includes hundreds of ideas to keep your evenings lively. It includes starter lists of top board games, films and more, but the real magic comes in adding your own favorites. These become prompts for the night's entertainment, ensuring you always have an answer for the announcement, "I can't think of something to do."

Build stronger, deeper connections to your family in low-pressure, fun activities. Give it a try. You might be surprised how easy it is for everyone to find a little time for Family Hour.
